Chapter 10 - The Great Depression

The Great Depression was a severe economic downturn that began in 1929 and lasted through the 1930s. It was caused by a combination of factors, including overproduction, falling demand, and a stock market crash. The depression led to widespread unemployment, poverty, and social unrest. In the United States, the unemployment rate reached nearly 25% by 1932. In Europe, the situation was even more dire, with unemployment rates reaching over 30% in some countries. The depression also led to the rise of authoritarian governments, such as the Nazis in Germany and the Fascists in Italy. In the United States, the New Deal was implemented to provide relief, recovery, and reform. The New Deal included a variety of programs, such as the Social Security Act, the National Industrial Recovery Act, and the Agricultural Adjustment Act. These programs helped to stabilize the economy and provide relief to the unemployed. The Great Depression was a turning point in American history, leading to the creation of the Social Security system and the establishment of the Federal Reserve. It also led to the rise of the New Deal and the end of Prohibition. The depression was a time of great hardship, but it also led to significant social and economic changes that shaped the modern world.
